Every load of incoming grain is tested and sampled. If the barley is corresponding to our requirements of quality, is accepted and can be tipped in malt house.

Steeping in water takes 24 hours and during this period several times the air is pressed into steeping vessel. In the end the barley properly hydrated is transferred to germination area – Saladin box.

In few days barley undergoes modification

Green malt is dried by hot air and flow of air. During last stage of kilning temperature is increased to adjust colour and taste of malt. Final malt moisture content is up to 4.5 %.

Last step before the malt is transferred into the storing silos is to remove the rootlets from the malt. Then malt is cooled and stored in malt silos. To minimize the dust and impurities, malt is polished in polishing machines before dispatch.

GERMINATION

For germination process in our malt house we use latest technology of Saladin box system, where temperature and humidity is controlled by rotating turners.

In few days barley undergoes modification and in the end of this stage germinating barley is called Green malt.
